WARRIOR: This is the greatest day in the life of every warrior. I should have said that.

The great warrior has been discovered. I shall not let him fall to a coward's hand.

The warrior has a fine sword. The sword of the hero. The hero's sword. The hero's sword.

The warrior is not here. He is not here. He is not here.

Why are you here?

Remember your duty. To protect the warrior.

The warrior is dead!

It is not done. The warrior is not dead. He is not dead. He is not dead.

The warrior!

What is it? What is it? What is it?

Let me see your sword. Let me see your sword. Let me see your sword.

What is it? What is it? What is it?

There is no warrior.

Remember the warrior. Remember the warrior. Remember the warrior.

Let me see your sword. Let me see your sword.

One more warrior. One more warrior.

One warrior. One warrior. One warrior. One warrior. One warrior.

Let me see your sword. Let me see your sword.

Remember the warrior. Remember the warrior.

THEY were in the heart of the Atlantic, but they weren't. There's a reason for that, and it's not what you'd think. The fact is that the following pages describe the arrival of the Manzanillo.

As it turns out, they were not out of the air, and the landing party were not really the survivors of a rescue at sea. In fact, but for the fact that they were in a remote location, they were the same survivors, in waiting to die.

When a storm hit midway the Atlantic, a small boat, the Manzanillo, was blown away from the coast, leaving the lifeboat in the hands of a young couple. The boat was blown away from the coast, leaving the lifeboat in the hands of a young couple. The boat was blown away from the coast, leaving the lifeboat in the hands of a young couple.

The young couple, the captain of the boat, and the crew, were blown away from the coast, leaving the lifeboat in the hands of a young couple.

I want to see him, but he's always so busy. I'll try to catch him when he's alone.

Don't let him see you. It's dangerous.

Yes, but I have to know where he is.
